Psychodrama: From the Outside In

*by psychodramatist, health coach and author
Linda Ciotola*

Dates and Location: TBA

Experience a full workshop of psychodrama training from Linda Ciotola, a leading psychodramatist who employs trauma-informed methods to enhance her work. Her knowledge, character and experience will guide participants through experiential learning exercises to help concretize the information presented. Trauma-Informed Experiential Therapy engages the body through a set of safety structures, slowly and safely moving the participants in a controlled manner to a deeper understanding of self, greater self-esteem and self-compassion. When safety, skills and support are in place, trauma work can be done and deep body-based healing can happen.

This experiential workshop is for all levels of participants working or studying in the field of counseling and social work, educators working with adolescents, teens and/or adults, or other students and professionals interested in this form of action therapy. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to learn experientially the basic theory and methods of psychodrama, group psychotherapy, and sociometry. Participants will explore personal growth issues in action, combined with education about the Morenean healing arts and sciences. This workshop will be a unique personal and professional growth experience.

Participants will:

- Engage in the development and structure of the psychodrama format
- Expand their clinical intervention repertoire through use of action therapy techniques
- Increase body awareness in the counseling process
